

Arizona Problem-Oriented Leadership Institute

for Chief/Command Executives (AZ POLICE)

This new program is designed to help senior-level Arizona police executives improve police service, using a problem-oriented approach to policing.

The program will run for seven Mondays from 8:30 am to 4:30 pm:
March 20, 27, April 3, 17, 24, May 1, 8.

The program will explore the following topics:

- The nature and complexity of the police function
- The challenges in carrying out the full police function
- The strengths and limitations of the standard model of policing
- The principles and methods of problem-oriented policing
- The principles and methods of situational crime prevention
- The practice of problem-oriented policing
- Shifting and sharing responsibility for addressing public-safety problems
- Leading and managing a problem-oriented police agency

Eligibility

The program is open to command-level law-enforcement officers. Space is limited to 15 individuals.

Location

Arizona State University Downtown Phoenix Campus, University Center 580A, 411 N. Central Ave.

Instructor

Primary instruction and facilitation will be provided by Clinical Professor Michael Scott, a former police chief and the director of the Center for Problem-Oriented Policing. Other ASU police scholars will contribute to the program instruction and facilitation.

Cost

$1,000 (includes course materials, lunches, and parking). Payment payable to the Center for Problem-Oriented Policing.

ASU Course Credit

Participants who are admitted to ASU may earn 3 course credits by enrolling in CRJ 583 Fieldwork: Problem-Oriented Policing Leadership, and paying tuition. An additional writing assignment must be completed.

For further information, contact Michael Scott.

ASU ARIZONA STATE UNIVERSITY

School of Criminology and Criminal Justice Center for Problem-Oriented Policing

411 N. Central Ave., Suite 600
Phoenix, AZ 85004

602.496.0409

msscott5@asu.edu

popcenter.org